

Catherine Rogers has loved drama since she was very young, creating plays and coercing siblings and friends into parts. Her degree is in Music Education with a vocal concentration. She has been a part of plays and dramatic events like the Boar's Head Festival in Williamsburg throughout high school and college and as a public-school elementary music teacher.

As a homeschooling parent and teacher, she created a class called Literature to Drama for middle school students, studying a Shakespeare play and staging her own hour-long adaptation over the course of the school year. She is currently the music director for two high school musicals and a voice teacher. Catherine sings with the U of M Choral Union and she will sing for the Beaver Island Festival this summer.
